Diploma in Agricultural Extension Services for Input Dealers (DAESI)

In view of globalisation and World Trade Organisation (WTO) regime, there is a need for diversification of crops, improvement in productivity and quality, while reducing the cost of cultivation, to be competitive in domestic and international markets. Systematization of areas under different crops to be grown in ensuring season creates healthy relation between market requirement and arrivals of commodities in the market, thereby stabilizing the prices. This will also help in planning, production and distribution of inputs on time. Thus, the focus should be on market led extension.

There is a large network of about 2.82 lakh Agricultural input dealers in the country who are the primary source of farm information to the farming community. Nearly 90 percent of the Agricultural input dealers operating in our country do not have any formal Agricultural education. They seldom realize the implication of 'Regulations' related to handling of agricultural inputs. They are basically businessmen and know about different market forces and lack technical information relating to agricultural technologies like soils, nutrients management, integrated crop management, IPM, post-harvest technologies, water management, information about commercial crops, pesticides, Agricultural tools and implements. If they are transformed into Para-professional by providing knowledge they can facilitate market led extension, a reality and thereby bringing a paradigm shift in Indian Agriculture.

The course has been designed to suit the requirements of the input dealers, to make the dealers more competent in topics like agro-climatic condition, soils, soil analysis, land use planning, INM, IPM and crop production technology in respect of all type of crops grown in the area including Agriculture and Horticulture crops, vegetables, floriculture, farm mechanisation etc. These would be taught during the course period to improve technical and communication skills among the dealers.

This information bulletin provides essential information to the students seeking admission to Diploma Course in the University of Agricultural and Horticultural Sciences, Shivamogga.
